Today marks the 200th anniversary of the surrender of the British garrison at Yorktown. This historic event marked the end of the American Revolution and the independence of the United States.

The surrender at Yorktown was a turning point in the war, as it led to the Treaty of Paris in 1783, which officially ended the conflict. The American colonies were now recognized as independent states, and the United States of America was born.

The surrender ceremony took place on October 19, 1781, and was attended by high-ranking military officials from both sides. It was a significant moment in American history, and it is celebrated each year as a national holiday.

The surrender at Yorktown was a result of the combined efforts of the American and French forces, who had joined forces to fight against the British. The victory was a testament to the spirit of cooperation and unity that characterized the American Revolution.

Today, we remember the brave men and women who fought for freedom and independence. Their sacrifices and determination continue to inspire us to this day.
We opened our material prospect to the public.

At the time of our opening, the language was

Back to Mississippi, back to Alabama, back to Florida, back to New Jersey. Hence, let us take a long look at the land we love to call our own. Let us walk in Valley of Decision. It is time to give my best to the land where I was born. It is time to face our difficulties. It is time to have a dream. A dream that is grit deeply rooted in American dream.

It is a dream to go down main street of the South, to walk in the streets where we speak. It is time to sit down at the Table of Brotherhood. It is a dream to do the same as slaves and free sons and daughters were able to sit down at the Table of Brotherhood.

It is a dream to sit down and to eat what we have been told to eat. It is a dream to sit down and to eat what we were able to eat. It is a dream to sit down and to eat what we were able to eat. It is a dream to sit down and to eat what we were able to eat.

It is a dream to sit down at the Table of Brotherhood.
